JANE ROSENTHAL

Jane Rosenthal is Chief Executive Officer of Tribeca Enterprises. She co-founded Tribeca Productions with Robert De Niro in 1988, and since that time has distinguished herself as a leading film producer of critically and commercially acclaimed films. She produced one of the highest grossing comedy franchises of all times—Meet The Parents (2000), as well as its sequel Meet The Fockers (2004), and the third installment in the series, Little Fockers (2010). In 2001, to spur the revitalization of lower Manhattan following the attacks on the World Trade Center, Rosenthal, along with partners Robert De Niro and Craig Hatkoff, founded the Tribeca Film Festival, which has attracted more than 3.5 million visitors and generated over $725 million dollars in economic activity. Rosenthal also co-founded the Tribeca Film Institute and has served as co-chair of the board since its inception. A vital resource for filmmakers, TFI also provides educational initiatives, in cooperation with the NYC Department of Education and the Mayor’s Office of Film, Theatre and Broadcasting, to help harness and direct the energy, vision and promise of New York City’s middle and high school students. The Opportunity Network partners with TFI to enable students to explore careers in film through summer internships.

CARLOS WATSON, JR.

Carlos Watson, Jr. is Managing Director and Global Head of Education in the Investment Banking Division at Goldman Sachs. His career spans politics, education, entrepreneurship, television, and finance. He joined Goldman Sachs in 2010, focusing on media and education companies. Prior to this, he was a management consultant at McKinsey & Company, advising Fortune 500 companies. A graduate of Harvard and of Stanford Law, Watson co-founded Achieva College Prep Services, a venture-backed education company which helped thousands of high school students prepare for college, and sold the firm to the Washington Post/Kaplan in 2002. In addition to his success in business, Watson has had a distinguished career in television. In 2003, he was recruited as host of CNBC’s “The Edge with Carlos Watson.” He went on to serve as one of CNN’s main political analysts during the 2004 election, co-anchoring the cycle’s major events including election night coverage. Before joining MSNBC in late 2008, Watson co-hosted an award-winning interview program, earning an Emmy, a Gracie and two Telly Awards. He is currently on the board of directors for College Track, a college access program he co-founded to benefit students from under-resourced communities in East Palo Alto and Oakland.

THE OPPORTUNITY NETWORK

The Opportunity Network seeks to equal the playing field for high-achieving, underserved high school and college students by creating access for them to career opportunities, professional networks and college. We believe influential networks are essential ingredients for success not emphasized in career development programs for youth, so we take an innovative approach by underscoring the power of personal connections and professional relationships as vital complements to skills and experience. Through unique interaction with executives, intensive networking training, coursework in careers, internships and college guidance, our students dramatically change the course of their futures.
